

Marshall Warfield

MOTEL SWIMMING POOL, LATE AFTERNOON

As
we
enter,
the first waves
ripple out to strike the walls with tiny claps. Then stars explode on the surface around us. We inhabit this universe as enormous drifting astronauts—so huge, God finally sees us.

From Poems for the Writing: Prompts for Poets by Valerie Fox and Lynn Levin (Texture Press, 2013). All rights reserved. Marshall Warfield has given permission for teachers to use this poem/handout for their classes.